Description:

The woodlands of the lower Wye Valley form one of the most important areas for woodland nature conservation in Britain, comparable with the Caledonian pinewoods, the oceanic oakwoods of western Britain, the New Forest and the mixed coppices of East Anglia. Unlike most other regions, semi-natural woodland is abundant and virtually continuous along the gorge. The woods are a mixture of many types, some of which are very localised, eg the lime-sessile oak stands on limestone; beech stands on both acid and alkaline soils in which lime, elm, oak and other species share dominance. Most woods are a rich mixture of stand types, which are believed to be similar in composition to the original natural woods of the valley. Many rare and local species are present, including some of the rarest native tree species (eg large-leaved lime, whitebeams), and trees close to the edge of their European range, eg hornbeam, beech. Furthermore, these woods sit in a matrix of unimproved grassland and other semi-natural habitats which, together with the woods, make the Wye Valley one of the most diverse, rich and attractive areas of southern Britain.

Croes Robert Wood is an area of relict coppiced woodland with flushed acid soils on moderately steep slopes at the northern edge of the Trellech Plateau. Wych elm Ulmus glabra, ash Fraxinus excelsior, birch Betula pendula and cherry Prunus avium as both coppice and occasional standards predominate the upper slopes with more extensive areas of alder Alnus glutinosa coppice below. The wood also has an interesting bryophyte flora.
